2. Describe and explain your drawing: (about 80 words)

This picture I drew shows that the main characters of the story (The Prince and the Pauper) are both similar and different. They have similar appearance but very different backgrounds. The background in the painting shows their respective living situations. The life of pauper is poor and difficult but very free. The bird in the painting represents freedom. About the background of the prince, the chains represent limitations. This means that his life actually is not free and happy because of the rules and etiquette of the royal family.

I think this book is interesting and educational. In this book I learned to put oneself into others' shoes. You could not understand why other people acted in that way unless you experienced it yourself. Also, I learned to be content. Knowing from the unhappy life after the protagonists switch identities, we know that some things are not as good as they seem. Many times we are envious of other people's lives, but we have not experienced it ourselves. How can we know the full view of other people's lives? Therefore, we can as well think about the beauty of life now and cherish the things around us. At last, I will introduce this book to my friends as it is interesting and educational.
